School's Out: After-School Programs and Policies that work

A Family Perspective for State Policymaking

February 28, 2007
Springfield, Illinois

■ The Illinois Family Impact Seminars

The Institute of Government and Public Affairs, in partnership with a network of 18 universities around the nation, offers the Family Impact Seminar in Illinois. Building on the institute's existing programs, these nonpartisan briefings are designed to help members of the state Legislature assess and solve policy problems that affect families.

During each legislative session, an advisory board identifies the most pressing family policy issues facing the state and determines which issue can be best addressed in a short seminar using existing research knowledge. Nationally-recognized experts skilled at translating research for legislative audiences make presentations at the seminar and contribute written materials. The briefings typically consist of several 15 minute presentations, with time for discussion in between and at the end. Frequent small-group sessions allow for more in-depth discussion with the experts.

Past seminars across the states in the network have addressed a range of topics with relevance for families. These include prescription drug costs, Medicaid, long-term care, childhood obesity, teenage pregnancy, early childhood education, education finance, juvenile justice, and welfare.

Experts for the Family Impact Seminar are drawn from diverse academic disciplines, including economics, education, human development, political science, psychology, and sociology. They come from universities, non-academic think tanks, and government research bureaus. These experts are asked to offer a range of solutions that recognize the unique political, fiscal, and programmatic context in the state. The briefings consistently receive high ratings from across the political spectrum, including conservative and liberal, Republican and Democrat state legislators.

The Institute of Government and Public Affairs organizes the Illinois Family Impact Seminar under the direction of Dr. Rachel A. Gordon, Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Faculty on each of the three university campuses also contribute. IGPA expects to hold at least one seminar each year in Springfield.

Founding partners for the Illinois Family Impact Seminar include the Institute for Juvenile Research in the Department of Psychiatry on the Chicago campus and the Department of Human and Community Development and the School of Social Work on the Urbana-Champaign campus.

The Policy Institute for Family Impact Seminars network is directed by Karen Bogenschneider of the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Additional information about the seminars and the network can be found at: <http://www.uwex.edu/ces/familyimpact>.

Acknowledgements

The Illinois Family Impact Seminars benefit from the good advice of the members of the Policy Network for Family Impact Seminars, directed by Karen Bogenschneider at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, and the members of our advisory committee, listed on the prior page. We are particularly grateful for the contributions of our planning committee, which in addition to IGPA faculty members Rachel Gordon and Elizabeth Powers included Jennifer Becker-Mouhcine, Director of the Illinois After-School Partnership, Robert Goerge, Research Fellow at Chapin Hall Center for Children at the University of Chicago, and Peter Mulhall, Director of the Center for Prevention Research and Development at IGPA. Our Social Policy Interns, Liat Shetret and Mandy Paquette, and the IGPA staff, under the direction of Assistant Director Sue Sindelar, provided excellent assistance to this project. We are also grateful for financial support from the William T. Grant Foundation and for the participation of our excellent set of presenters, Priscilla Little, Charles Smith, and Jennifer Stedron.
