Biography:

Jennifer Stedron is a Program Manager in the Education Program at NCSL. She is the program policy specialist in the areas of afterschool extended learning opportunities, early childhood education, and special education. Dr. Stedron is a member of the Afterschool Technical Assistance Collaborative (ATAC), a group of national organizations that provide technical assistance to state afterschool networks of providers, policymakers, educators and others interested in afterschool programs.

Dr. Stedron received her Masters degree and Ph.D. from the University of Denver in Child Clinical Psychology with an emphasis in Developmental Cognitive Neuroscience. She has published journal articles and book chapters on aspects of cognitive development and developmental disabilities. Just prior to joining NCSL, Dr. Stedron worked as a clinician at Denver Children's Hospital providing assessment and treatment services to children with learning disabilities, developmental disabilities, brain trauma, and mental illness. She has also worked for the Michigan House of Representatives and for Abt Associates, a public policy research organization.
